MONTHLY EUR/USD CHART

The U.S. Dollar Strength Continues

Last Wednesday the Federal Reserve boosted interest rates another .75% which gave more strength to the U.S. Dollar. Last week the Dow Jones average was down over a thousand points and gold broke its $1680US/oz major support level. Everyone is seeing red in their portfolio and the junior mining sector is no exception. The British Pound is crashing hard against other currencies. Oil continues to drop, currently trading at about $78/US per barrel.

Putin continues to apply pressure on the Ukraine invasion, even threatening using nuclear arms.

Iran has erupted in protests over the death of a woman while in police custody. [41 people have died]

Italy has elected its first female prime minister, Gorgia Meloni. [It was a far-right coalition victory.]

Hold on tight, I don't think the bear market will be over anytime soon. Are we close to [capitulation?]

Have a good week!

ARGENTINA LITHIUM & ENERGY

Argentina Lithium & Energy believes that the combination of high geologic potential and a promising demand climate have set the conditions for delineating and advancing new lithium resources in Argentina. The Company's management group has a long history of success in the resource sector of Argentina and a strong track record of government and community relations.

Four under-explored projects in the heart of the Lithium Triangle in Argentina.

Brine mapping and drilling planned for 2022.

• ~57,000 hectares of claims on four salars in the Lithium Triangle.

• Projects strategically located in pro-mining provinces Salta and Catamarca, near key infrastructure with year-round access.

• Aggressive new exploration programs in 2022 and continued evaluation of new prospects.

Projects

Rincon West

- 2,491 ha under option; 460.5 ha 100%-held
- Adjacent to Rincon Ltd. and Argosy Minerals lithium projects with proven reserves
- Excellent infrastructure including international highway, electric power corridor
- First drill program, 5 holes, underway
- 1st hole results positive: intersected a 70m permeable interval with 225 to 380mg/L Lithium

Pocitos

- +26,000 hectares under option
- Excellent infrastructure: International railway to Pacific ports crosses the property; Provincial highway and major gas pipeline nearby
- Limited historic exploration

Antofalla North

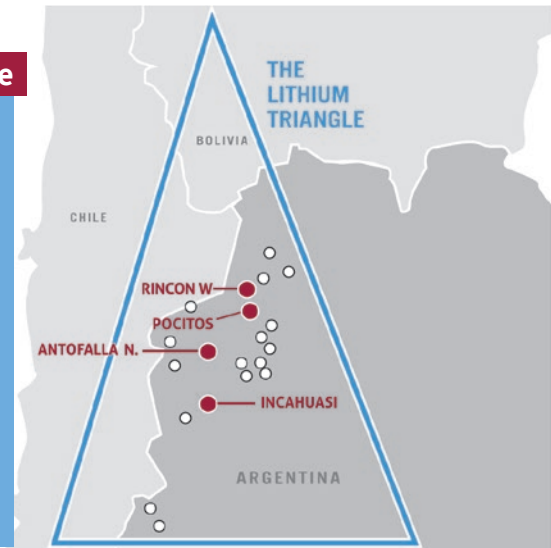

- 9,080 hectares of 100% held claims + nearly 6,000 hectares under option
- Major lithium producer Albemarle has large holdings starting 500m to the south
- Geophysical survey identified high-conductivity targets in upper 100 metres, additional targets at depth

Incahuasi

- 100% interest in over 25,000 hectares
- Located north of Lake Resources' Kachi Project
- Maximum values 409 mg/L lithium and 1.56% potassium recovered in near-surface sampling (to 8m depth)
- 4 drill-holes confirmed lithium-bearing brines (average to date 109 mg/L Li, 6718 mg/L K)

Exploring the Prolific Lithium Triangle

- Lithium Triangle produces ~1/2 of the world's lithium
- Hosts ~60% of known lithium reserves
- Most lithium is in salt lake ("salar") brines
- Argentina produces ~10% of the world's lithium and is a top-5 global producer (2020)
- In close proximity to rail, water, roads and power
- Argentine government is encouraging foreign investment and renewable energy initiatives

FOMO EVERYTHING, EVERYWHERE, ALL AT ONCE.

BY: JACK RAINES YOUNGMONEY.CO
SEPTEMBER 20, 2022

What is the most addicting drug in the world?

It isn't nicotine, heroin, or any sort of amphetamine. It's not alcohol, marijuana, or junk food. The most addicting drug in the world is that high-pitched ping that emits from your phone every time you receive a new message, a new invitation, a new opportunity.

The most addicting drug in the world is FOMO.

FOMO

\ 'fō-(.)mō\

Noun; informal: fear of missing out : fear of not being included in something (such as an interesting or enjoyable activity) that others are experiencing.

I moved to New York City a month ago for business school, and I swear this city is the living, breathing embodiment of FOMO.

ping "Happy Hour on Wednesday at Jake's Dilemma!"

ping "Birthday party this weekend in Lower Eastside!"
"Birthday party next week in West Village!"

ping "Are you joining the club rugby team?"

ping "Do you want to go to Mexico for Fall Break?"
"We have a group looking at Puerto Rico!" "What do you think about Costa Rica?"

And that's just the business school stuff. Do you know what happens when your finance blog starts gaining traction?

ping "Do you want to hop on my podcast?"

ping "Can I pick your brain about ____ and ____?"

And of course, I have non-business school friends in NYC to make plans with. Ping. And friends and family back home in Georgia who I want to visit, and who want to visit me. Ping. And trying to make time for your dating life in the middle of the other million things I just mentioned:

Ping...

Ping...

Ping.

Across iMessage and Whatsapp and email and Instagram and Slack and Twitter, I probably receive upwards of 500 notifications a day. What do I respond to? What opportunities are worth pursuing? What is best left alone?

Of course, I want to say yes to it all. But that's just not feasible when you are one person with 24 hours in a day.

FOMO Metastasizing

FOMO isn't just a social thing. FOMO has many names, and it can hit every area of our lives. "Lifestyle creep." "Keeping up with the Joneses." "Greed." FOMO exists in our careers and portfolios just as much as it does in our social calendars.

Purchasing more expensive cars, houses, and clothes not because you want to, but because you feel obligated to thanks to your association with your peer group is FOMO. Pursuing the job that you don't really want to do, but you want to tell people that you do is FOMO. Saying yes to events that you don't really want to attend is FOMO.

No part of your life is impervious.

Passively investing in index funds is, for most people, the optimal way to allocate their portfolios. The S&P 500 averages ~9% returns per year, and $10,000 invested annually for 40 years would yield ~$3.7M if previous historic trends hold true. If you approach investing rationally, it should be a slow and steady long-term game that pays out over time.

This isn't some closely-held secret controlled by the gatekeepers of finance. There are a million blog posts, books, and articles that cover the benefits of long-term index investing. There are a million more blog posts, books, and articles that cover the perils of taking unnecessary risks with one's investments. And there are plenty of investing platforms that offer you these services for basically no cost.

So why do investors keep pouring money into speculative assets, often to their own peril? Why, in the last few years alone, have we had SPACs and crypto and AMC and GameStop and ARKK and NFTs and so many other things that just didn't make any sense?

Because FOMO doesn't care about rationality. It thrives on irrationality.

Ping "Bro, I made $65,000 on GameStop, you have to get in!"

Ping “EVs are the future, why aren’t you buying call options on Tesla?”

Ping “These NFTs are insane, I 100x’ed my portfolio last month.”

When you witness a friend make life-changing money by betting on GameStop, or you read an article about a trader who flipped 100x returns buying Tesla calls and NFTs, FOMO ignites that part of your brain that thinks, “That could be me.”

FOMO pushes data and statistics to the side and says, “Let’s make some money.” FOMO tells us that we are the exception, not the norm.

And FOMO, if not resisted, leads to losses. Social FOMO steals all of your time. Investment FOMO incinerates all of your money. Career FOMO destroys all of your focus.

Ironically, FOMO is often a function of your success in a given field. If you are a social butterfly with a large network of friends, you probably get invited to a lot of events. If you have a lot of money, you are exposed to a variety of investment opportunities. If you build a successful career, you will have more and more options for new, exciting jobs.

The better you are at something, the more opportunities that FOMO will throw your way.

But a high susceptibility to FOMO will decrease the success that created your FOMO in the first place, as your attention and energy are spread too thin. If you try to say yes to every single invitation, you will find yourself in countless shallow relationships. The invitations will slow as the connections between you and others fail to strengthen. If you invest in every startup pitched your way, your wealth will evaporate and you will no longer have access to these investment opportunities. If you job hop every time a hot opportunity comes your way, you will never have time to truly refine your skills in any specific field.

FOMO watches you delicately juggle all of your life’s responsibilities, and it adds ball after ball until you lose control and drop everything.

FOMO is a dangerous game.

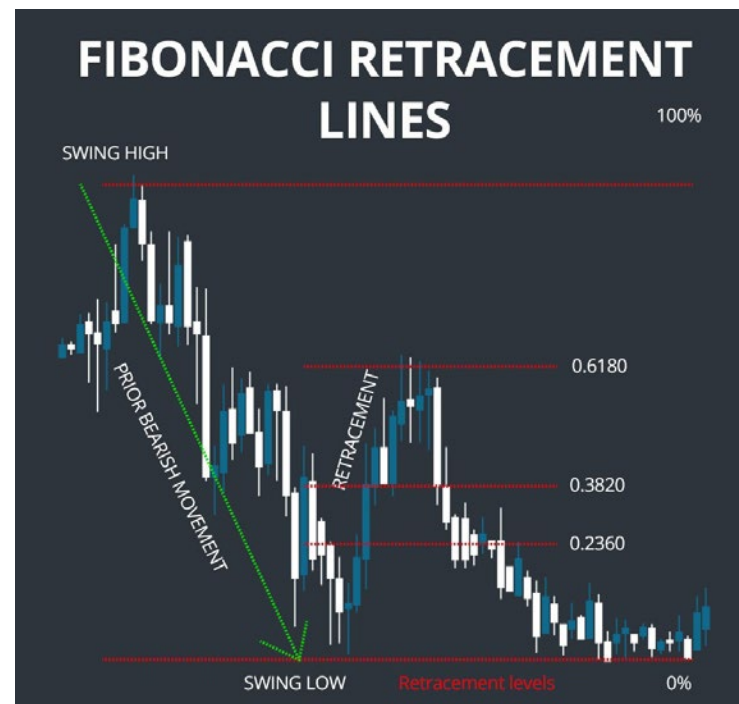

Now to be fair, FOMO isn’t always a bad thing. It can motivate you to make friends, succeed professionally, explore your city, pursue love interests, and see the world.

But unchecked FOMO is catastrophic. Like the ship stranded at sea being pulled to and fro by the waves and the wind, FOMO leaves you at the mercy of your outside influences, unable to commit, constantly jumping on the next hot thing.

When everything and everyone is vying for your attention, your “No’s” are much, much more important than your “Yes’s”.

- Jack
